Yet, such is the case; and as we dwell upon it we are almost lad to believe that God not only is not with us, but against us. He has confounded our judgments, divided our councils, and delivered as into the hands of the feeble, the faint-bearted, and the billes. And why should He be with us, bass, groveling, and corrupt as we are! We are not with thin! We are a godless, consciencess, religiouses people. Thate is no honor, no virmo, no devotion, except among the masses, while sinety per cent, of all whe range above the unsand dollar incomes are lyex eyed sharpers, who are watching every neighbor with suspiciou, and who subertil mate every maniment to self. Debauched by an extravagant prosperity, and apared mercufully from all sacrifies, we have ungratefully forgitten a due reilance upon Hassyn, and the result is than, except in the case of the simple virtuous, labering people, we have practically become ance upon Heaven, and the result is that, except in the case of the simple virtuous, labering people, we have practically become a community of etheists. There is no conscience attached to the intelligence and wagin of the community; and laymen, as we are, and of the world, we say unit you, follow-country men, that there can be no lasting government without public virtue; no enduring nationality without a universal genes of God. Hamiled as our country has been in the field, and stupified as it is by the tricksters of the Cabines, it wints seem that we are only to arrive at the stage whan we may be permitted to rebuild, by sufferings and sacrifiess, and perhaps through a preliminary chaos, which is is greatful to auticipite.

The United States army, and the people too. sel the enormous losses inflicted upon it by Gen. Leo. The Philadelphia Inquirer has on article on the want of more man, in which it holds this language:

It is the feshion to account for the superior on ergy and desperation of the rebels by saying that they have everything at stake. most time for us to recognize that we are in the s. A Washington letter in the South-whether willing y or unwillingly, is immaterial as to practical result. With all our superiority of resources we must fall unless we are animated with a similar spirit. All that has value in the eyes of a free people hangs in the balance, and will inevitably be lest unless we can rise to the magnitude of the occasion.

Large as are the armies we have but into the field, they are not in themselves sufficient. Constant recruiting is necessary to preserve their effectiveness. The waste of war is fearful, and reserves are indispensable if we are to strike a final blow at the heart of the rebellion. Heroin has been our error previously, and it is a cheering sign that Gen. Grant intends not to allow himself to be crippled, as our other commander have heretofore been, unable to follow up an ad-

Recurring Samity.

Wilker's (N. Y.) Spirit of the Times, edited by a man who has heretofore been a strong advocate of the war, doesn't seem to be very much classed by the prospects of the war.

Never before have we fait a depression equal to that which assals as at this moment. Three years have now elapsad since the commonement of the war. A datt of eixteen fundered millions states us in the face; and nearly used up. The classic hope which hunged the gien.

A late number of the Natchez Cearier has the There's Grant, here's Lee, and here's thinknoid —all dans in two strokes and a dut of the walking stick. Carlyle's "Illiad in a nulshall" is nowhere, compared with this baconic demonstration of the great problem of Grant as Lee. Walking stick strategy is the thing after all. It will break the backbone of the rebellion quicker than anything I know of. Fires and kneck-downs are proving common almost every night in Natches.
